Risks by UV radiation:

The invisible UV radiation from the sun holds many risks.

The penetration depth of the UV rays into the skin is dependent on the wavelength, UV radiation reacted thus in differently deep cell layers.

Short-wave UVB rays are considered as principal reason to sunburn (erythema), skin cancer and premature skin aging (skin folds).

Short-wave UVA rays are jointly responsible for premature skin aging and form a cause for various sun allergies (as well-known "Mallorca acne").

However:

Long-wave UVA rays also release the boosted pigmentation, called tan of the skin (the desired, long persisting suntan), and contribute to a vital appearance.

Risks by IR radiation (infrared/radiant sunheat):

Also the penetration depth of the likewise invisible IR radiation of the sun, felt on the skin as warmth, depends on its wavelength. The close IR-A radiation penetrates deeply into the skin and works into the retina of the eye.

This radiation attacks the mitochondria ("power stations of the cells") in the skin cells and provides there for oxidative stress by aggressive oxygen molecules (free radicals) and thereby for dry skin, premature skin aging and leads to skin cancer risks.

With the eye the invisible IR-A-radiation endangers the retina (cataract).

However: Apart from these dangers and the risks of an overuse of the blood circulation caused by the thermal stress the IR-rays offer, depending upon penetration depth, anodyne, relaxing and cure-promoting warmth.
